St Thomas' Hospital

St Thomas' Hospital was named after Thomas Becket, the Archbishop of Canterbury who was assassinated in 1170. Run by a mixed order of Augustinian monks and nuns, the hospital originally provided shelter and treatment for the poor, sick and homeless. In 1539, during the Reformation, the monastery and hospital were dissolved, and then reopened 12 years later. The hospital moved to Lambeth in the 1860s with Queen Victoria laying the foundation stone at its current site in 1868. St Thomas' has been treating patients here ever since.

Guy's Hospital

In 1721, Thomas Guy applied to build a new hospital for the 'incurably ill and hopelessly insane'. The original hospital consisted of a courtyard facing St Thomas Street and an inner quadrangle. The buildings have been added to over the years and were extensively repaired following severe bomb damage during the Blitz. The 18th century chapel remains intact and includes the tomb of Thomas Guy. Today, the Guy's Hospital campus consists of 19 distinct buildings dating from the 18th century to the present day.
