Care of your child’s mouth after their dental extractions

This leaflet explains more about your child returning to their everyday activities after having a tooth taken out (known as a dental extraction) under local anaesthetic.

How will my child feel on the day of the procedure?
Your child’s mouth will feel numb for two or three hours after the procedure. The following tips will help them to feel better more quickly on the day of the procedure.

Encourage your child to:
- relax, rest or play quietly
- chew on the opposite side of their mouth (if extractions have been on one side) and eat soft and cool foods.
- avoid touching the affected area with their fingers and tongue.

You should also let your child’s dentist know if they take any regular medication (as they may need to be asked to stop taking it for a short while).

Do not allow your child to:
- eat or drink anything that is very hot while their mouth is numb
- exercise strenuously
- spit or rinse their mouth out (this can cause more bleeding)
- bite their cheek, lip or tongue.

What should my child do if the extraction site starts bleeding?
You or your child should apply firm pressure to the area with a damp cotton gauze, for 10 minutes. If the bleeding continues, repeat for another 10 minutes. If this fails to control the bleeding, phone the department (contact details on the next page), or come back to the Dental Centre at St Thomas’ Hospital, Mondays to Fridays, 9am to 5pm. If we are closed, contact your child’s dentist or – as a last resort – visit the Children’s Emergency Department (A&E) at St Thomas’ Hospital.

How will my child feel over the next few days?
Your child may feel a little sore, and there will probably be some swelling, but they should not be in severe pain. If they need to, allow your child to take simple painkillers such as paracetamol and/or ibuprofen. Read the instructions carefully and make sure your child does not exceed the stated dose.

How should my child look after their mouth?
Your child should brush their teeth as normal. They should not brush the extraction sites on the day of the procedure. From the day after the extraction for three to five days onwards, after every meal, encourage your child to gently rinse their mouth using a warm salt water mouthwash (one teaspoon of salt to one cup of water).
What should I do if my child has a problem?
If you are worried that your child’s mouth is not healing, there is persistent bleeding, or if the swelling and discomfort is not improving, then please call us or return to the department.
