

Pain relief after ear, nose and throat (ENT) surgery

This leaflet explains about pain management after ENT surgery. If you have any further questions, please speak to a doctor or nurse caring for you.

Pain relief after surgery

It is important that you try to manage the pain you may feel after you leave hospital. Using pain relief can help you to relax and be more comfortable, and this can help you to recover more quickly.

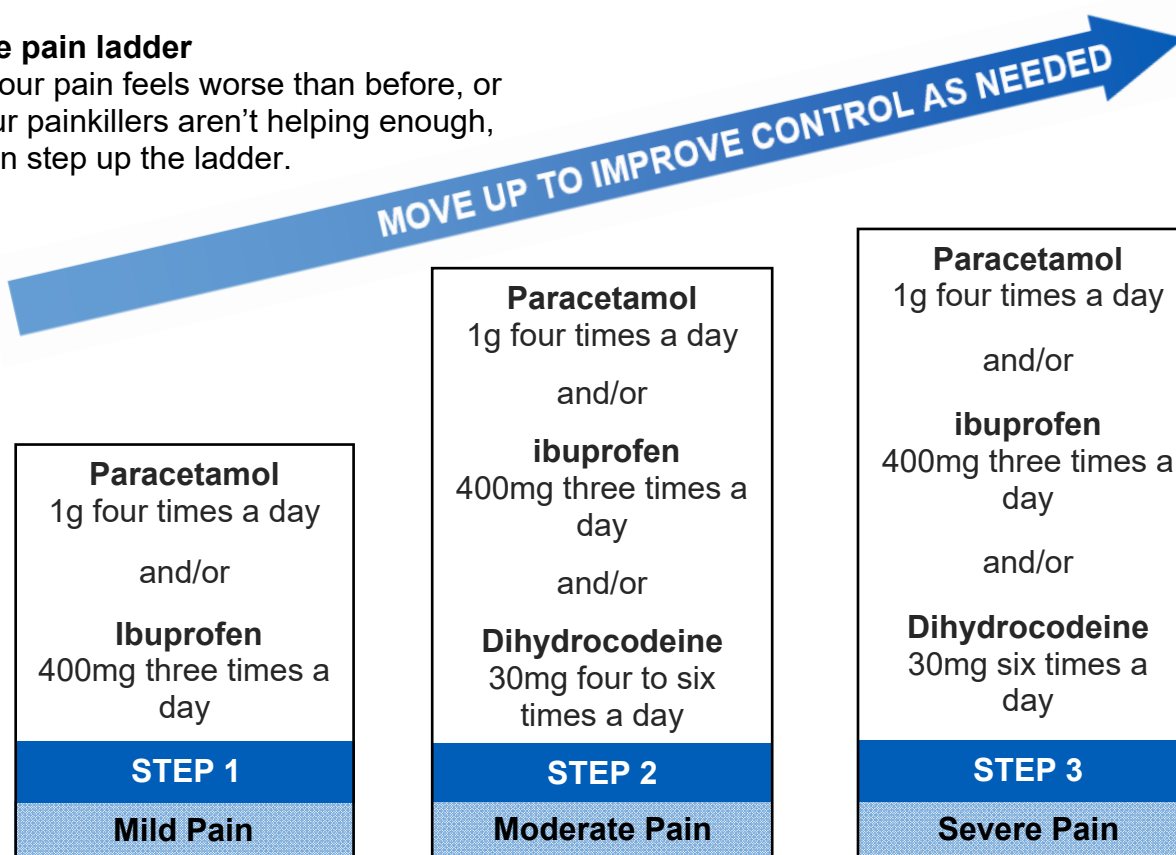

Painkillers are most effective when they are taken regularly throughout the day, rather than waiting for the pain to start or to get really bad. They also work best when different types are combined, as they work in different ways that complement each other.

The different combinations address different levels of pain. Some people find it useful to see these as steps on a ladder, as below.

Paracetamol and ibuprofen are painkillers and are available without prescription. They are effective when taken regularly and at the same time. We do not normally dispense or prescribe them as they are widely available over the counter in many shops.

The pain ladder

If your pain feels worse than before, or your painkillers aren't helping enough, then step up the ladder.

Suggested doses for medication

Suggested combined doses for adults are:

- paracetamol 500mg take 2 tablets, four times a day
- AND
- ibuprofen 200mg: take 2 tablets, three time a day with meals.

We sometimes prescribe the painkiller known as dihydrocodeine. This can be taken in addition to paracetamol and ibuprofen. If you have not been prescribed dihydrocodeine and you experience an increase in pain, please contact your general practitioner (GP) or the ENT department.

As with all medication, read the information in the packet so that you are aware of any side effects or affects they may have on other medicines or conditions.

You should:

- follow the suggested dose
- remember to take your painkillers regularly and in combination as described previously
- only consider taking dihydrocodeine if your pain is not adequately managed with paracetamol and ibuprofen

You should not:

- take ibuprofen if you have had stomach ulcers in the past or if you have indigestion
- take ibuprofen if you are allergic to aspirin
- take ibuprofen if you suffer from asthma and your symptoms (wheezing or breathless) get worse
- take paracetamol if you have been prescribed co-codamol (as this contains paracetamol already)
- take paracetamol if you are already taking another medication that contains paracetamol (some cold and flu remedies contain paracetamol – please check all labels carefully)
- drive any car or operate heavy machinery if you have taken any codeine, tramadol or morphine medication.
